The Scribble brush lets you draw or erase directly onto an image. The Paint Bucket tool lets you fill an area of an image with any color. The Mixer Brush gives you the ability to apply paint styles, fonts, and textures to an image. Lastly, the Pen tool lets you create, edit, or draw directly on an image. Adding text to an image is the simplest way to give your images some type, but there are many options that come with Photoshop when you have a more specific project in mind. Listed below are the essential tools in Photoshop for creating text. If you think there's a tool you're missing, let us know on Facebook. The Text Tool allows you to add text to an image. Simply make the type you want and click the button to bring up the menu. You can choose from a few font styles, adjust the text size, and choose text placement in your image. You can also choose to align your text, choose any of the trim options on your page, use the Shadow and Glow features, and much more. Use the Warping tool to warp an image while you drag and drop a user-created pattern over it. Simply drag the pattern across your image, then choose the type of movement to give your image a 3D look. The pattern can even be split, duplicated, or turned off when you're done. Sometimes you just need a quick way to add animation to a picture. The Duplicate Image tool creates an exact copy of an image and then it lets you apply a range of effects and filters to them. You can add animation or play it back as a quick effect. Add some drama to an image with shadows. The Shadow options let you choose from 8 presets that work to add a variety of shadows for different types of objects and effects. One of the tools you'll find in Photoshop is the Gradient tool, which lets you create and then use swatches to apply color changes to an image. Once you create your gradient, you can make adjustments to the colors and blending options and then apply it to other areas of your image. Editing with Strokes changes every type of paint layer in an image to create a unique look. This tool lets you create a custom paint stroke and then apply that to any area of your image. The Dodge and Burn tools allow you to make or remove areas in an image, so you can refine or Extracorporeal membrane oxygenation (ECMO) has revolutionized pediatric and neonatal care and is increasingly being used in adults. ECMO involves placing a cannula in a major vein or artery of a patient such that oxygenated blood flows from the cannula through a membrane oxygenator to the patient, and returning the oxygenated blood from the patient back to the cannula, through another membrane oxygenator in the circuit, after filtering in a bubble trap. The oxygenated blood is made available to a patient by, for example, a pump attached to the blood inlet of the cannula. For example, ECMO is used in patients with severe respiratory or cardiac failure for whom mechanical ventilation is unlikely to succeed, or who have a major part of the lung injured, thereby severely impairing lung function. Bystander activation, also known as bystander effect or cross-fire, is a type of immunologic response of host cells to free radicals induced by radiation.[1] Radiation exposure of mammalian cells in vitro can induce oxidative damage, as well as release of free radicals, which in turn induce apoptosis or cell death. An example of this phenomenon is radiation-induced bystander effect, which is an anti-tumor effect of ionizing radiation. Furthermore, the free radicals released from apoptotic or dead cells can induce apoptosis in neighboring cells via bystander effect.[2] The apoptotic effect mediated by bystander effect has been observed in tissue culture, animal, and human studies. Animal studies have shown that irradiated cells can induce apoptosis and cytokine release in cells distant from the irradiated cells and that distant apoptosis is significantly reduced in the presence of the antioxidant, glutathione.[3][4][5] Contents The central role of free radicals has been demonstrated in the pathogenesis of radiation-induced myelo- and fibrosis, resulting in an increased risk of radiation-induced cancer in the irradiated tissue or organ. The apoptotic role of the release of free radicals, initially demonstrated with the zoonosis of feline leukemia virus, has been also established with the discovery of the oncolytic immunological benefits in cancer treatment, provided by host specific immune cells against the cancer, an effect called immunopotentiality. Nevertheless, unlike other traditional cancer treatments that induce immunosuppression, immunopotentiality with the free radicals releases of the anti-cancer activity by an increased apoptosis of the neoplastic cells, namely the "
