The goal is to make FIFA more accessible for people of all ages, including children, women and players with disabilities. EA Sports combined the data generated in the player motion capture suits with data from motion capture inside the stadiums in FIFA 19, as well as additional new data from the motion capture lab in Nürnberg. This is the most robust motion capture ever used in any sports title, and the new technology also includes real-time depth adjustment, new graphics, and new animations, including knee tackles, punches, and more. Animation improvements were also made in the central gameplay systems, such as a new left-right cross-zone motion of the player's feet; improved attacking and defensive positioning during through balls and 1-v-1 situations; enhanced attacking and defensive rotations; and an improved attack threat during collisions with opponents, as well as while turning and changing direction. The new animation also improves the tracking of players when on or in an attacking position in the box and on the ball, enabling players to perform more realistic, in-depth, in-game actions such as corner kicks, shots and crosses. Player positioning while in possession of the ball When a player is at the heart of a play, they need to be positioned in the correct spot in order to take advantage of the short space available to them. In previous games, players would move towards the ball quickly and loosely, depending on the speed of the pass and when players ran back to cover. With FIFA 22, players move more naturally towards the
