It's an odd feeling. It's an odd feeling to think that the Toronto Maple Leafs — one of the most successful teams in NHL history — will be on the brink of missing the playoffs for the first time in almost 40 years. It's the first time the Leafs have missed the playoffs since 1975 — a fact that doesn't seem to be sinking in with all of us. In hockey circles, the Leafs are a perennial powerhouse. On the ice, the Leafs are among the most consistent teams in the league. And off the ice, they have roots among the best in the world. For several years now, Leafs president Brendan Shanahan has tried to build a successful team on the backs of the original six.
