- Total controlling person - Like a platformer, but difficult - Different kinds of enemy - Sometimes difficult - Beautiful graphics BRICK! Yo! Yep, that's what this is all about. The best example of Modernist architecture, and hopefully the best example of Medieval architecture, too. Have I mentioned architecture before? I mean, I found some games and some things I want to make, and maybe make some of the time, but... In most of the levels, you have to escape some captured persons. Each captured character has a colored light. The one with the brightest light is the one with the highest danger. The only way to escape, is to collect all 3 lights. Pass any level and get an expert reward. The Expert reward is: - 2,000,000,000 points - A 10-Fold increase in speed - Gold - Infinite Loots - A collectible Another solo looping level, but now you're supposed to collect a flower while you're jumping. It's much much easier with this update. But now you can collect as many as you want! Adding some more music I'm building a wall and I'm shooting! ANDROID: SURFING: About this app: I wanted to make these two games together so I can upload them to play store. I hope you like it. I posted the download link(android) for free, but I added some things to this games like: - A little explanation - Some powerups - Addict powerup - Explainer on how to upgrade you gems - Some new enemies - And more Google Play link: - This game is about the ending in the movies. Some disturbing and bad things will happen. - There is 4 levels of difficulty. - There will be a boss in each level. - You can unlock a friend in the online game! - You can edit you character in the editor! - There is a

NO SYMPATHY EVER!! I spent most of my life being very very very fat. I had horrible acne as a teenager (pre-hormonal) and became anorexic, having a poor eating disorder as a young adult. At my biggest I weighed about 400 pounds so I felt pretty comfortable saying that I was considered grossly obese. I had at least one experience as a teenager with the anorexic type of thin girl where I'd call her "skinny" (in a nasty snobby way) because I thought fat people were gross. I also hated my fat body, it was (and still is) extremely self-conscious (I'm partially Asian and I'm embarrassingly tiny for asian). I wanted to be fat. I just didn't know it until I was like "hey I am fat now I guess." It took me years of really bad eating to figure out that maybe, just maybe, I was indeed pretty fat. Now, not all fat people are the same. Not all fat people are unhealthy and I am not saying to all fat people "oh boo you fat!" But I want you to know that some fat people are indeed unhealthy. Some fat people are sick or unhealthy just like some skinny people are sick or unhealthy. And some skinnies are sick or unhealthy. I don't understand it all but I did make some sort of effort to become healthy this year, and while I didn't lose a ton of weight I do feel healthier now. It doesn't just start and end with "healthy = thin" in some cases, honestly. Story time: My very fat childhood years (Navy hospital kid) Thinking about my childhood made me remember how much I hated myself when I was fat. I was so embarrassed and I would go through situations where I would lie down to do my homework, rest my feet, etc. I remember one day (8th grade?) when I was rushing to finish something in time (homework) because I had made a date with a boy and I remember the lies I said that day to my mom. I kept insisting that I was fine, telling her to relax, just to be calm, to give me a little more time. Then I made a fake call to my brother and told him to let the other "fat

10.1002/pcr.2935 1. INTRODUCTION {#pcr2935-sec-0001}
===== Geographical factors have been identified as one of the main reasons of environmental pollution (PM~10~; Li et al., [2018]{#pcr2935-bib-0037}{ref-type="ref"}). Another ecological risk is land use change (Henriksen et al., [2017]{#pcr2935-bib-0027}{ref-type="ref"}). Due to the global increase in population and consumption of energy, the demand for on-site energy production is also increased. As a consequence, more and more cities are using incinerators as a possible solution to this problem (Gokuz, Keskin, & Efe, [2007]{#pcr2935-bib-0024}{ref-type="ref"}). Incineration, among other types of energy sectors (especially electricity generation), is shown as the most polluting of all existing sources of energy production, producing low-quality particulate air pollution (PAP). Air pollution and some of its associated impacts are the most serious threats to human health and the environment. Today, PAP emissions are the most frequent cause of health problems in the world. An increase of 21% of deaths has been reported in the developing countries from 2016 to 2018, and the additional deaths of 16 million people are expected by 2030 (Hughes, Souza, Okonkwo, & Nwoko, 2018{ref-type="ref"}). Other problems raised in urban areas include climate change, which is significantly affecting human health (Lamar et al., 2017{ref-type="ref"}). This study discusses the evaluation of existing PAP emissions in three cities located in the Brazil Rhône-São Paulo state domain, namely, three areas in the city of Santos (Santos Central
