The present invention relates to an apparatus and method for controlling the temperature of biological tissues, and more particularly, to a laser therapy apparatus and method which is capable of uniformly heating a local area of a biological tissue without causing thermal damage to the surrounding tissue. Recently, a laser therapy apparatus which is capable of treating the tissues, diseases and disorders of the living body has been used. The laser therapy apparatus is used with a high power laser beam, which is focused at a relatively short distance to the tissues of the living body, so as to improve the treatment effect of the laser beam. Since the laser beam is focused at a relatively short distance, the surrounding area adjacent to the laser beam is heated. The temperature of the surrounding area of the biological tissue is higher than that of the biological tissue under the focus of the laser beam. The laser beam focused at the biological tissue is not uniformly transmitted to the local area of the biological tissue of the living body. To control the temperature of the local area of the biological tissue, a closed cooling system is used. The closed cooling system includes the laser beam transmission system, which is controlled to direct the laser beam to a desired portion of the tissue of the living body. At the same time, a compressor and a heat exchanger are used to cool a liquid introduced to the closed cooling system. The closed cooling system absorbs the high power laser beam of a large area to reduce the temperature of the surrounding area. As a result, the laser beam can be uniformly transmitted to a desired portion of the biological tissue, without causing thermal damage to the surrounding area of the biological tissue.
